FOR WHOM DO FASHIONABLE WOMEN DRESS.—The idea that ladies who lavish enormous sums annually in personal decorations dress to fascinate their husbands, lovers, or men in the aggregate is a vulgar error. A fashionable woman is not half so anxious to win the admiration of the men as to provoke the envy of her own sex. The truth is, that gentlemen, as a rule, know very little about the commercial value of female attire, and (except when they are called upon to pay the bills) care less. An elegant and becoming toilet, however inexpensive, generally satisfies them. Not so with our first family belles and dashing dowagers. Cost is their standard of excellence in costume. And what consummate sumptuary critics they are. No tradesman is a better judge of the articles in which he deals than the lady of fashion is of all the articles her sisters wear. With a single sidelong glance, rapid keen and searching, she can reckon up the habiliments of a rival in the beau monde almost to a shilling! No pawnbroker however accustomed to gauge the price of costly trumpery could come nearer the mark. Imitation cashmeres, simulated lace and false jewelry however [illegible], do not deceive them for an instant. She sees through the cheat as easily as a banker detects a forged bill, and sneers inwardly at the vain attempt to cope with her genuine extravagance. She triumphs in the reflections that all her splendors are sterling, and that her "set," sharp-eyed as herself, can distinguish between cheap fine ladyism and the ruinous grandeur it is intended to cope with, as well as he can. But mole-eyed man sees not the difference unless it is pointed out to him. It is not obvious, from these premises, that the richly bedight goddess of fashion's empyrean, dress to provoke envy in each other rather than to command manly worship? Of course they like to be admired by men, but to be envied by women is a supreme luxury.

AUTHOR AND ACTOR.—A London theatrical sheet says a word for dramatic authors:

There have been some speeches made lately as to the relations between manager and author, especially at the inauguration of the Central Hall, of the Dramatic College, at Maybury. We must confess that we did not exactly understand what that question had to do with any ceremony connected with almshouses for actors. Had it been an inauguration of almshouses for authors, the matter might have been very different. It was not so however, and the irrelevancy of the matter was passed over in the natural excitement which prevails on such occasions. The simple fact is—and we have called attention to this matter before—that British dramatic authors are underpaid because British audiences are satisfied with poor rechauffées of French pieces, and because British managers are not only content to supply such ware, upon cheap terms, to the public, but from a kind of combination against the admission of any but a close borough of translators or adapters into their theaters. Doubtless they find that this plan is not unprofitable, but we doubt very much whether it is beneficial in the end. Under the present system the theaters are not filled half the year, and during the [illegible] they have to resort to the miserable and unsatisfactory system of papers, or "orders." Under the present system, £40 is considered a handsome price for a farce, and £100 is a noble price for a three-act comedy. To be sure, when we reflect that the latter is often translated (or "adapted") in a week, and that the former may be knocked up by two hack litterateurs in about a couple of days, the price is ample; but is this to the advantage of art, of the drama, of literature? Surely not.

FREAKS OF ELECTRICITY.—The Scientific Review says: A very strange property has recently been observed in the bodies of persons, etc., struck by lightning—the power of giving a strong electric shock when touched. It might be supposed that the electricity would be completely carried off by the conducting power of the human body, and especially if that power were rendered more complete by the presence of moisture. Such, however, is not the case; and it is not possible to explain the anomaly by means of any principle furnished by the present state of our knowledge. The facts, however, are indisputable, the two following cases have been brought before the Academy of Sciences, at its sitting on the 10th July, by M. Boudin: On the 30th June, 1864, a man was killed by lightning in the Jardin des Plantes at Paris, and the body remained exposed for some time to a very heavy rain. When the storm was over two soldiers, who attempted to take the dead body away, received a violent shock the moment they touched it. Two artillerymen, charged with the removal of telegraph posts, which had been thrown down at Zara, in Dalmatia, by a storm, on the 8th of September, 1866, at first, on laying hold of the telegraph wire, two hours after the lightning had ceased, experienced slight shocks, and then were suddenly thrown down, one of them having his hand severely burned, and the other remaining without any signs of life. A comrade, who attempted to render assistance, was attacked with nervous symptoms, and had his arm burned.

SAD.—We have seen, recently, several persons who afforded us a theme for moralizing. They are men who once occupied high position and commanded respect by their talents and manly character. To use a vulgar but expressive phrase, they have gone to the dogs. They are worse than dogs because a dog is true to his instincts, and lives in accordance with his nature and in obedience to the laws that govern it. To see talent in rags and nobility of soul wrecked upon the skeleton shore of intemperance, is a spectacle too sad to be contemplated without deep pang of regret. We could cite individual cases, if we chose to name them. We once heard a lecture of surpassing eloquence on temperance, by one of the most gifted sons of genius we ever had the good fortune to know. He depicted its evils in startling colors, and held his audience spellbound for hours. The next we saw of him, he was dead-drunk in a gutter. It was not Tom Marshall but was a genius kindred, if not equal to his. Poor fellow, he could talk like an archangel and drink like a fish. On Montgomery street in San Francisco, many such wrecks may be seen and we may see them, perhaps, on the streets of Grass Valley. God forgive them for the waste of glorious powers, and redeem them, if not in this world, then in another.—Grass Valley Union

AN APT SMILE.—Mr. Mudie, the author of some popular works on "The Seasons," was originally a teacher in Dundee. He happened to be one of a tea party at the house of the Rev. Dr. M——. The Doctor was reputed for the suavity of his manners, and his especial politeness towards the fair sex. Handing a dish of honey to one of the ladies, he said in his wonted manner "Do take a little honey, Miss ——, 'tis so sweet—so like yourself." Mr. Mudie could not restrain his native tendency to humor so handing the butter dish to the host, he exclaimed "Do take a little butter, Doctor, 'tis so soft so like yourself."

A CAVE IN NEVADA COUNTY.—Some time since, it will be remembered says the Grass Valley Union that we published a statement of a large body of water having been struck in the Pike tunnel on Union Hill. After the water had sufficiently escaped to permit of working, the men employed in the mine discovered a large cave, natural in its formation and running back a considerable distance in the tunnel. In fact so extensive is this cave that no one has yet been enabled to trace its termination. It is quite a curiosity and is daily visited by large numbers of novelty seekers.

A schoolmaster, who, whilst poor himself had given gratuitous instruction to [illegible] but when increased in worldly goods began to think that he could not afford to give his services for nothing. "Oh, James, don't say the like of that," said the good-hearted woman [illegible] a poor scholar never came into the house that I did not feel as if he brought the fresh air of heaven with him. I never miss the bit I give them [illegible] heart warms to the soft and homely sound of the [illegible] on the floor, and the door [illegible] opens of itself to receive them in."

SCENE IN A NOTARY'S OFFICE.—(Notary to fruit vender with basket of peaches.) "Boy, what have you got in that basket?"

Boy—"Peaches sir, the best kind."

Notary—"You swear to that?"

Boy—"Yes, sir."

Notary—"All right, hold up your hand. Peaches best kind to the best of your knowledge and belief so help you, etc. Charge you fifty cents for swearing. Will take it out in peaches.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE

MONDAY MORNING, NOVEMBER 27, 1865

Southern Members of Congress

Elections have lately been held in several of the Southern States, and as the telegraph from time to time has informed us, quite a number of Congressmen have been chosen who confess they cannot take the oath which is prescribed for those who are to sit in the national councils. That those who have been elected will present themselves at the doors of the House of Representatives and claim seats in that body, can hardly be doubted. Many of these so called members were chosen by a rebel constituency, because of their eminent services in behalf of the late "Confederacy." It is not too much to suppose that members of the late rebel Congress will often be sent to Washington with credentials in their pockets, claiming seats in our national legislature. The question arises or shortly will arise: Shall these men be admitted? To say nothing about punishing them for their rebellion, would it be good policy to admit them? Would it not be an act of injustice to the country and to the loyal members to do so? Can men who have done their utmost to destroy our Government, ever be fit legislators under it? Ought not Congress to be preserved against the corrupt and treasonable influences that would attend the admission of this class of men within its halls? We are charged to exercise forbearance in our dealings with the South but is there there to be no forbearance on the other side? Shall we be frightened from our duty to ourselves and country by the cry of "persecution" whenever we insist on just loyal and fair dealing on the part of Southern men? It is the nation's right to exclude from its halls of legislation the men who, as members of a treasonable body, sat for years, plotting our overthrow. The South should be taught that this is the purpose of the loyal portion of our people. Nor should those States think it a hardship that members of the late rebel Congress cannot be received to sit as peers among loyal men.

In 1863, a law was passed by Congress requiring the following oath of "every person elected or appointed to any office of honor or emolument under the Government, except the President of the United States."

"I solemnly swear that I have never voluntarily borne arms against the United States since I have been a citizen thereof, that I have voluntarily given no aid, countenance, counsel or encouragement to persons engaged in hostility thereto; that I have neither sought nor accepted, nor attempted to exercise the functions of any office whatever under any authority or pretended authority in hostility to the United States; that I have not yielded a voluntary support to any pretended government, authority, power or constitution within the United States hostile or inimical thereto; and I do further swear that to the best of my knowledge and ability I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States."

This is the stringent oath which some of the Southerners can not take. If they cannot take it let them remain out of Congress. That body will have more character, efficiency and loyalty, if every person who cannot take this oath shall be forever deprived of a seat in its halls. An effort will be made to set aside the act of Congress which prescribes this test, but patriotic members will adhere to and enforce the law.

Hypocritical Reprovers.—We notice that the Louisville Journal and a good many other papers of its ilk—papers which when the rebels began the war, heaped the whole vocabulary of denunciatory epithets on President Lincoln, because he tried to meet the crisis and save the country—are now lecturing the Radicals, as they are termed, for "trying to keep alive sectional animosities and prevent a restoration of the Union." The Radicals don't want the Union restored! They are the very men who prevented its disruption. And after they have saved the Government, to step these once lukewarm patriots claiming the credit for themselves, and censuring the Radical Union men because they want to take such measures as will render their victory secure. One of the strangest of all inconsistencies is to hear men who would have done, and did do nothing, to prevent the triumph of the rebellion, now charging the patriots who fought the battle through in spite of opposition at home and discouragement in the field, with hostility to the Union. Had the Radicals done no more to save the Union at the outbreak of the war than the halting, half rebellious "conservatives" did, there would now be no Union for the latter to charge the former with trying to destroy. For one of the tame "conservatives" to lecture a true Union man on the performance of his duty, is a good deal like the devil citing Scripture for the reproof of a saint.

The Statesman wants the General Government to pay our soldiers' bounty bonds. In support of its preposterous demands, it makes the following assertion:

"To be sure, the United States is assuming the war debt of every other loyal State."

Here's a wonderful piece of news. Will you tell us what States have been so fortunate as to find the General Government willing to pay State, county or town bounties? A long time ago the United States assumed the debt of Texas and paid it; a few weeks since, Gov. Fenton of New York, by a proper representation of facts, induced the General Government to refund his State a few thousand dollars in payment for material which she had furnished to carry on the war. This is the full amount of "State debts" assumed by the United States. No State bounties have yet been paid or "assumed" by the Government. Oregon will be informed that she can have the privilege of paying her own debts.

Very Rich.—We have been shown another proof of the richness of the Gold Creek (North Santiam) mining district. An assay of rock from the Phœnix ledge was made in this city on Saturday, showing silver to the amount of $3771 80, and gold to the value of $38 57. The Phœnix is situated between the Gibbs and Tracy ledges. Its owners have sunk a shaft upon it to the depth of forty five feet. Operations there are closed for the present season but work will be resumed next spring.

The indications are that the quartz lodes of the Cascade mountains will prove as rich as those of any other region, Owyhee perhaps, alone excepted. The nearness of those mines to the valley, and the small cost of transportation as compared with the high rates which have to be paid to reach other districts, must result in making the lodges of the Cascade mountains very valuable to the country.

The Shenandoah.—This pirate has at last left the seas and gone home to the kind mother who some time ago indulgently let it loose to begin its sportive career. So the Shenandoah, the last symbol of the power of the Confederate States of America, is no longer a "war ship." Our Government will probably demand and obtain the vessel, but the piratical captain and crew will no doubt escape our hands. We shall get pay, however, for the depredations they committed, and besides we have the satisfaction of knowing that they can never return to this country. To be rid of them in this way is quite as good as to hang them.

St. Louis.—The two last issues of the Weekly Oregonian have not reached our subscribers at St. Louis, Marion county. We suspect these papers have been sent through to California. We have often had to complain of this inadvertency on the part of Postmasters. St. Louis, Oregon, is a long distance from St. Louis, Missouri.

By Overland Telegraph.

Lawrence, Kansas, Nov. 24.—Col. Graves, special Indian Agent, and Col. Dodd, Agent for the Navajoes, left here to-day with a train of twenty-two wagons laden with agricultural implements and a quantity of goods and presents for that tribe. Another Railroad Disaster.—Mexican News.

Philadelphia, Nov. 25.—The through train from Newark for Washington, which left at 8 o'clock this morning, ran through the turntable at the New Jersey Railroad. Two men were killed and several injured.

A Washington special says: Gen. Steele represents the Imperial force at Matamoras as completely beleaguered. He expresses the opinion that the French will be compelled to surrender to the Liberals who hold both banks of the river, and environ them on all sides. The Liberals have authentic information that three weeks ago the imperialists were reduced to one third rations and they are completely cut off from Vera Cruz and Tampico.

The Times' Havanna letter of November 8th, reports that the defeat and capture of the Republican General Ortega in Michoacan, and the destruction of his whole army. His troops were divided into three bodies to capture Morelia, and so they were beaten in detail and dispersed, 100 prisoners remaining in the hands of the imperialists. The Republican General Diaz is said to have led the attack on Morelia. Though at first successful, he was finally beaten. The Republican General Rosales was defeated at Alamos in Sinaloa. The adhesion of Lower California to the Empire is announced.

European News.

Signed, RANKIN, Agent of the Associated Press.

Troubles on the Canadian Frontier.

New York, Nov. 14.—The Hartford Courant of yesterday says it is informed semi-officially that a company of marines from Canada crossed into Maine for the purpose of arresting deserters. The men refused to return with the officers and application was made to the United States authorities to have them given up, which was refused. There was danger of an outbreak.

Hancock's corps is ordered to rendezvous in Maine. A company attached to Hancock's corps in that city left for Augusta, Maine, on Saturday evening. The Hartford Post says the company left the city on Sunday for Augusta, it is rumored either to prevent the Fenians from entering Canada or to prevent British soldiers from enticing deserters from their army who have fled to the United States.

The Georgia Constitution Adopted.

New York, Nov. 14.—The Herald's Milledgeville despatch says: The New Constitution of Georgia, constructed by the State Convention, was adopted as a whole on Nov 6th. As it was adopted the State debt contracted to aid the rebellion is repudiated.

Bad Spirit of the South.

New York, Nov. 16.—A fireman's riot occurred in Jersey City this evening. Several persons were injured. The riot was quelled by the sheriff and some arrests made.

Richmond papers say that at the opening of the United States District Court in Richmond, Nov. 14, Martin F. Conway was the only lawyer who could be admitted to practice. No others have taken the necessary oath.

A special dispatch to the Tribune says that the rebels defeated all the Union candidates in Northern Alabama. Frank H. Gurley, the murderer of Gen. McCook, was elected sheriff of Madison county. Rev. J. P. Morris who declared that he could not take the oath, and any man who could was a black hearted traitor to the South, was elected to Congress from Madison District.

President Johnson's Decision.—In these times, when so much depends on the decision of our President, such anecdotes as the following are encouraging:

The day before the execution of the assassins, there was a great deal of discussion in this city about the probable reprieve of Mrs. Surratt. A company of gentlemen were at the Astor House, most of them agreed that the woman would not be executed, assigning the reason that the President would not have pluck enough to withstand public opinion and let a woman be hung. A well known merchant of New York who was present coolly remarked, "A man who talks about Andy Johnson's want of pluck evidently doesn't know the man. If Andy Johnson has signed the death warrant of Mrs. Surratt she will die. If he had intended to reprieve her he would not have signed it." He added: "Let me tell you what I know. I was shut up in Nashville when it was surrounded by twenty thousand rebel troops, who demanded its surrender. Gen. Buell was in the city in command of ten thousand men. He determined on the surrender of the city to the rebel forces. He came to Governor Johnson and announced that he could not defend the city, and that Nashville must be surrendered. The Governor heard him quietly through, and then replied: 'You are in command of the United States troops, and can do what you please with them. But two of the regiments belong to the State of Tennessee. Over them I have control. In the center of the city is a powder magazine. I have trenches dug connecting it with every prominent building in Nashville. Now you march out with your troops. I'll defend the city as long as I can. When I can do no more I will fire the city and blow it to the heavens, for Nashville shall never be surrendered while I am alive.' Buell did not march out and Nashville was not surrendered. What I tell you," said the merchant, "I heard. But the moral grandeur and heroism of those utterances cannot be told. And that," quietly remarked the merchant, "is Andy Johnson, and so all will find him who have to do with him."

We clip the subjoined from the Albany Journal of Friday:

The "oldest inhabitants" in this part of the county declare that the wind blew harder and more of it last Sunday night than ever before within the recollection of man. Fences were thrown down, unfinished houses upset and a general "scatteration" made of everything movable but no serious damage has been done as far as we have learned.

By a letter received by Mr. J. R. McClure from his son, who is a member of Company F, [illegible] county Volunteers now stationed at Fort Lapwai, information has been received of the death of George Miller, a soldier belonging to the company. He died on the 4th of this month at Fort Lapwai.

The river steamers are busily engaged in shipping up freight for the merchants at the different points along the river and taking away produce of every description.

Henry Langdon, who was arrested at Portland a few weeks since charged with stealing money from the Stage Company at Corvallis, has been tried and sentenced to three years in the State Prison.

The Idaho papers say that when the jury returned the verdict of "not guilty," in the case of Ferd Patterson, Judge McBride "very abstracted they [illegible] and ordered his immediate release." We are sorry to hear such a report. If "the Judge" is ever sent to Washington again it will be the ruin of him. The effect of [illegible] has badly demoralized him.

Speculating in Yankee Doodle.—Some Arabs at the pyramids in Egypt address a traveler, at taste our American sympathies thus:

"You want me to carry you up the pyramid, eh? All gentlemen pay me for help them. You pay me run up the pyramid and down in five minutes, eh? Is that many time?" A long pause. "You American? Yankee Doodle come to town, he bring a little pony. You know that?" This was carrying the war into Africa by Africans. They evidently felt that they had us on our own ground, and observing that we were amused at their expedients they crowned their triumph by shouting, "Hip, hip, hurrah!"

Minnesota raises 10,000,000 bushels of wheat this year, and will have 3,000,000 bushels to sell. She will also have $2,000,000 worth of oats to sell.

Grant County.—We have returns from the special election in Grant county. That county [illegible] the name of the great chieftain Ulysses. In Canyon City Higgins [illegible] had a majority of nine, in the county a majority of fifty or sixty. This is pretty good for the McClellan banner county. Col. Drew holds there promise to do something still better next June, something, in fact, that will astonish the subjugated Copperheads of that region. Grant county is now fully redeemed. The Canyon City Democracy [illegible] themselves in the several counties [illegible]

The Apocatastasis, or "Progress Backwards." The Democracy might make good use of the title of that book to describe their present condition.

The late storm at Canyon city raged with unexampled fury. It continued for several days—the rain falling in torrents and the wind prostrating many houses and great numbers of trees. Some snow fell on the surrounding mountains, but travel between the several camps still continues.

Improvements.—[illegible] Oregonian [illegible] building [illegible] Hall [illegible] Register.

We are highly gratified to find that our reminder is taken so kindly, and that it has moved the Register to promote [illegible] and the "rest of mankind" well informed on the subject of Yamhill's present prosperity and prospective greatness.

A Copperhead paper says "Thad. Stevens is doing all the harm he can." The same journal says "the case of A. H. Stephens is a peculiarly hard one and he ought to be pardoned at once." If the Pennsylvanian were as guilty a rebel as the Georgian, would the Copperhead be satisfied with anything less than having him hanged? Never.

An Auburn correspondent informs us that the Grand Jury at the late session of the Circuit Court, for Baker county, refused to take any notice of the numerous violations of the gambling and Sunday laws which have occurred at Auburn. For this the jury was severely rebuked by the presiding Judge.

The Methodist Church South will lose about one third of its membership—two hundred and forty thousand negroes. The colored disciples don't want any more of that sort of religion.

Death, its Modes and Sensations.

BY DR. W. H. WATKINS

[The following is a lecture delivered in this city a few evenings ago. A number of our citizens having expressed a desire to see it published, we requested Dr Watkins, a day or two since, to furnish us a copy for that purpose, which he obligingly consented to do.]

Ladies and gentlemen: While endeavoring to elucidate and simplify the principles which belong to the subject of the evening's lecture, I shall avoid as far as I may, all the professional and technical terms which naturally belong to and surround it, and make known to you as far as possible in a single lecture, the steps and processes by which dissolution takes place. Those who have often stood by the sick bed and watched decaying nature throw off its mortal coil, know we do not all die alike. One person, if I may so speak, may be dying, passing down the declivities of life for days, or even months and years. Another, in the maturity of manhood, in the fullness of his powers, full of life and joy, glorying in the strength and courage of perfect development, walking the earth a being noble in reason and infinite in faculties, is stricken suddenly as by a bolt from heaven.

One passes to the final bourne capable, conscious, in the full and perfect exercise of his intellect and the display of his sympathies. Another goes, reason clouded, darkened, dethroned. How these things are, I will try to explain.

First, I may remark that the one essential thing necessary to life, is the continued circulation of the blood, and any interference with its circulation tends to death. The blood is the great pabulum and renovator of life: by it and through it, the nutrient principles of our food are taken up and distributed to every hungry cell and granule of the body. But it also takes into its purple tide all the effete and disorganized particles, bears them by unfailing laws to the proper organs where they are eliminated and thrown off.

To keep the blood in circulation we have two systems of vessels, the veins and arteries. These two systems are connected by an hydraulic apparatus or force pump, the heart. The veins gather up every drop of blood from the most minute cells of the body, and in ever widening avenues, convey it to the right side of the heart. By a contraction of the right side of the heart, the blood is thrown to and distributed, for purposes of purification, through all the minute and delicate tissues of that most important organ, the lung. There it throws off its load of carbonic acid and other noxious ingredients. But it does more, it absorbs from the air which we breathe, oxygen, the great blood restorer. Thus purified and refurnished, it then passes to the left side of the heart, where by a contraction of this heart, it is impelled on, bearing vigor, health, life to the system at large.

But veins and arteries and heart, important as they are, have only physical and chemical duties to perform—their part is subordinate. Over all these functions is the presiding governing the nervous system, the brain, spinal cord and great sympathetic nerves, which keep constant watch and guard over all the functions and operations of animal life. Now, if we had a source from which the blood could be ever fed anew, keeping its currents ever full of the rich nutriments by which the body is re-invigorated, and had a good heart, perfect lungs, and a healthy, sound brain, we might live forever. But when, from whatever cause, either of these vital organs are injured, their proper functions interfered with, then life is endangered—death in fact has begun his work—for the absolute and perfect integrity of these organs is essential to the healthy and regular circulation of the blood; and, as before stated, this circulation is the one thing essential to the maintenance of life—for instance, a person is bled, soon his face becomes blanched, his lips pale, his eyes look blank, his muscular system gives way and he falls insensible. What happens here is simply this: the brain, by the flow of blood, is deprived of its ordinary nutrient and necessary stimulus. We call this fainting. To remove it, we place the person in a recumbent position, so that the blood by the ordinary force of gravitation will flow to the brain. Should this fainting continue till death supervenes, we say he bled to death. We see this mode of death on the field of battle, in many of the uncounted accidents of life. Death here, as is apparent to all, is owing to direct loss of blood, but the same phenomena takes place in fact, provided the blood be not constantly renewed, and we describe it by a similar term, debility. In truth, death by loss of blood, fainting, is a primitive type of numberless forms of death.

But let us suppose the heart to lose its power of contraction. The blood is plentiful and pure, but there is no propelling power to send the life giving current bounding on through artery and vein. We call this death from debility: debility of the heart.

We thus have two methods of death beginning at the heart. One because of profuse blood letting, there is no blood to distribute. In the other there is no lack of blood, but the hydraulic apparatus, the heart, has lost its power, and cannot distribute it.

These two modes often unite to produce death. I may instance that fearful scourge, which, taking its departure from the Delta of the Ganges, paying but little attention to variations of temperature, or altitude of elevation, or humidity of atmosphere, paying no respect to places or persons, which, in one epidemic, has carried to the grave one-sixth of the inhabitants of India, and emptied one-third of the dwellings of the towns of Arabia, and in its passage around its circuit, borne to the grave not less than fifty millions of the human race, I need hardly say I allude to Asiatic cholera—which even now is again on its devastating march around the world. This dreadful mortality is in my opinion caused by a poison generated by the sick and imbibed by the healthy, causing some change of unknown nature in the blood. At any rate, chemical analysis has shown that the copious discharges of this terrible malady are identical in composition with the blood, simply deprived of its coloring matter, and it has been determined that at the same time these discharges are taking place, the blood is deprived of precisely these constituents; and as might be expected we have the symptoms of profuse blood letting, or tendency to death from loss of blood. But even before there is much loss of blood we have from the very start, feeble and weak action of the heart. The pulse is small and quick, the skin is pale and cold, and covered with a clammy sweat. Sometime before death supervenes, the pulse no longer reaches the wrist, but over the region of the heart you may still hear its enfeebled pulsations, beating timidly and fearfully its funeral march to the grave. So true is this, that the two forms of death, viz: loss of blood and debility of the heart, both unite to produce the dread catastrophe—that from the strength of the heart's action, a fair judgment may be formed as to the result. However copious and wasting the discharges, however severe the cramps, however sunken the features, however cold and clammy the skin, we may hope for an happy issue provided only the heart throbs on with moderate strength, but if there is debility there, if paralysis exists there, the worst may with great certainty be apprehended, and at any moment, from the slightest exertion, from an attempt to raise in bed or effect a change of position, fatal collapse may ensue. Death also takes place in this manner in all long continued discharges, as diarrhea, dysentery, abscesses, old and extensive ulcerations, mortifications, some forms of consumption, cancer. In all those diseases of the stomach which prevent the assimilation of food—in fact the common type of these two methods of producing death is starvation. In starvation there is no renewal of the blood, its riches are distributed to the system at large, and soon it becomes impoverished, poor in blood corpuscles, poor in fibrin, poor in all those elements essential to healthy nutrition, and too soon it becomes more like water than the deep purple tide—the ordinary sustenance of healthy life, and the heart itself becomes impoverished and feeble, and fainter grows till life has ebbed away.

Many instances of death by starvation are on record. We hear often of persons deprived of food, by being confined by snow, by shipwrecks, besieged in cities, and still more dreadful when gaunt famine stalks through the land.

The young, the tender, requiring abundance of rich, nutritious food, bear starvation badly. The store house of the blood is soon emptied, and they soon succumb to the great destroyer. You may remember the instance of Count Ugolino, related by Dante as a case in point. Ugolino was confined in prison, with his four sons. He saw them all die in the order of their age, the youngest dying first, and finally on the eighth day the Count himself laid down to death. Woman however bears the privations of food, as of pain, better than man. Many instances prove this could be cited if necessary but one will suffice. You may recollect the Donner party, who, in the early migration to California were overtaken by snow. The party, if I recollect aright, consisted of two white men, two Indians and two women, for days they were without food. The Indians died first, then one of the white men, but one man and the women reached Fort Sutter, the man being nearly dead, but the women came in in comparative strength. Three women, buried by snow in Piedmont, were deprived of food thirty eight days and still survived. In nearly all the remarkable cases of long continued starvation without destruction to life the subjects have been women.

One of the most interesting cases of starvation affording opportunity to see and record all the changes produced by abstinence from food was that of Gio. Antonio Viterbi, who, confined in a prison in Corsica, starved himself to death. On the fifth day, the pangs of hunger succeeded the more cruel pains of unassuaged thirst but his iron will refused to bend. The spirit was still stronger than its clay tenement. He only put a drop of water to his burning lips and once actually gargled a little in his parched and fevered throat, lest the fiery heat which raged there should drive him to madness. On the tenth day his torture was so great that he seized the jug and drank immoderately. On the thirteenth he drank twice. On the nineteenth his agony grew so terrible, that despite his adamantine will, a few scalding tears escaped him and traced their way down his famished cheek. He brushed them away, contemned his weakness, with great courage, true to his inflexible purpose, he refused all nourishment, and on the twentieth day declared his end was nigh, laid down, stretched himself, asked if he was well out, and soon Viterbi was dead. We often see death take place by starvation even at the bed side. For instance, when we have disease of the passages leading to the stomach, preventing the introduction of food. Disease of the stomach itself preventing it from performing its proper office, the assimilation of food. As in cancer of the stomach, of course the patient as literally dies of starvation as if he had no stomach, or having a stomach had no food. But suppose, as we often see, the stomach rejects everything given it, we have again death by starvation, or its equivalent of which death by starvation is the common type, we have death by loss of blood and debility of the heart. We have the form of death by debility in many of those instances of sudden death in infancy and childhood. The child has been sick, subject, probably, to some exhausting discharge, when, owing to some slight over exertion, some sudden change of position, or, perhaps neglect to furnish the exhausted little sufferer with food during the hours of sleep, the heart is weakened, debilitated, and the little one passes to the other life as quiet as a dream. Let me exemplify. A young child is attacked with summer complaint, finally there comes a diminution of the distress, we hear no more the plaintive moan so subduing to listen to, the restlessness seems abated or removed, the mother's heart beats with joy, the darling is better, and so it would seem: but symptoms apparently of slight character, indicate that danger is very near: the cold skin, the quiet little one lying in unconsciousness, the slightly dilated pupil of the eye, all indicate that debility is lying in wait around the heart, and even in the moment of hope the joy of the family passes away.

The next mode of death to which I shall ask your attention, is that which originates in the lungs. I mentioned before, that the blood in its passage through the lungs is purified first by throwing off the carbonic acid with which it had become loaded. Second, by the absorption of oxygen. Now, if this action of the lungs be interfered with and the blood remains impure, it will stagnate somewhat in the lungs themselves. The heart, depending upon the rich pure blood for its natural stimulus, no longer responds in healthy rythm to this impure carbonized blood, but when this venous blood reaches the brain, it produces dizziness and a variety of sensations not unpleasant, soon the intellect becomes stupified, the brain no longer takes cognizance of the sensations conveyed to it, the chest ceases to expand and death ensues. We perceive upon depriving an animal of air, violent exertion of all the muscles used in breathing, violent struggles of the whole muscular system, prompted by a feeling akin to agony, the face becomes flushed and red, the eyes blood shot, the purple veins are full to bursting.

Shakspeare describes appearances as well as character. He says:

"But see, his eyes are black and full of blood,
His eyeballs farther out than when he lived,
Staring full ghastly like a strangled man;
His hair upreared, his nostrils stretched with struggling,
His hands abroad displayed as one that
Grasped and tugged for life, and was
By strength subdued."

Persons deprived of air die in a very short time—not more than from three to five minutes. I know many people believe a person immersed in water can be submerged from a quarter to half an hour, but this is certainly a mistake; from three to five minutes is much nearer the limit. Persons who have experienced the sensations of drowning, inform us they first felt a sense of anxiety and an oppression around the chest. This occasions those convulsive movements which bring them to the surface, but in attempting to get a gasp of air, water is drawn in, which produces a spasm of the muscles of the throat. All this violent exertion throws the blood to the head, where its impurities soon render the brain insensible, but the illusions which precede the state of unconsciousness are not painful or unpleasant. Rather a sweet delirium, soothing and agreeable, steals over the senses. He imagines himself amid scenes of beauty and grandeur. He wanders through labyrinths of never failing verdure and ever-living green. Landscapes, varied by hill and dale and purling brooks, fit to raise emotions of love and joy, are spread out before him. The mountain's brow, clothed like our own Hood with eternal snow, is burnished with the gorgeous glories of the setting sun. Resplendent waterfalls, crowned with rainbows, break upon the sight. The birds, gentle songsters of the air, fill his ear with music. The aroma of sweet scented violets, born on the bosom of the gentle zephyr, as it breathes through the groves of this enchanted ground, lull him to sleep and altogether he sinks to his rest with emotions exhilarating and desirable. If rescued while life still remains the first inhalations are excessively painful, and as the pure blood again begins to course through the brain, horrible imaginings take the place of the former images of pleasure and beauty. Many are the instances of death from suffocation. A person retires to sleep with a kettle of coals burning in his close room. The carbonic acid, from the blue burning coals, fills the room, excludes the living air, narcotises the brain, and the victim of either accident or design sinks quietly, dreamily to his last sleep. A workman is buried by a falling bank in one of our mines. His head may be free, but if his chest be confined, it is impossible to carry on the acts of inspiration and expiration, and he suffocates. Persons often die from suffocation owing to disease. Inflammation of the top of the wind pipe, causing it to swell, preventing the ingress and egress of air, causes death in this manner. By such a disease died George Washington, the Father of his Country. Fortunately this form of disease is rare. I have only had the opportunity of seeing it once. I was sailing in the Southern Ocean, beneath the benignant influences of the Southern Cross. I left the mate about half past ten o'clock in the evening, about an hour afterward he sent for me. I found him gasping and struggling for breath. In reply to my inquiries he was only able to answer, choking, Doctor, choking, and I have little doubt that in one short hour the good ship Grecian would have been without a mate, had he not obtained immediate relief. The thousand children who die from croup, die from suffocation. Inflammation of the substance of the lungs occasions such a change in its structure, that air is no longer admitted, the chemical changes I have mentioned, cannot take place, and death takes place from suffocation. Bleeding at the lungs may be, and often is so profuse as to fill the passages leading to the lungs, and the person suffocates, though the simple loss of blood itself would be of little importance. It may, perhaps, be known to you that the inhalation of chloroform for the extraction of teeth is particularly dangerous. The reason is this, that to relax perfectly the muscles of the jaw in order to perform the operation a very large dose is required. This benumbs the sensibility of the wind pipe, the blood, from the tooth's socket, runs back, enters the larynx or wind pipe fills it up and prevents the ingress of air. The same property of the chloroform which permits the tooth pulled without pain, destroys the sensations of the air passages so much that no sensation of choking or strangling takes place, and there is no effort to avoid expiration to expel the blood. The patient in this instance dies, not from any deleterious influence of the chloroform, but is simply suffocated by a foreign body, the blood. Oftentimes, in bronchial complaints, the air passages become filled and blocked up with mucus, and in consequence suffocation takes place. What causes the air to enter the lungs is the expansion of the chest, the air rushing in to fill up the vacuum. But suppose a person receives a wound in the chest, entering the pleural cavity, the air then enters here instead of the natural passages, the lung immediately collapses and lies dormant by the spinal column. If both sides of the chest are entered both lungs collapse and suffocation takes place. In one word everything which prevents the free ingress and egress of air to and from the lungs, any change of structure in them, any thing which prevents them from performing their ordinary and proper functions, any accident or injury which interferes with the regular movements of inspiration and expiration tends to death by suffocation. I mentioned to you before that sudden death in childhood often arises from debility.

But I cannot leave this part of my subject without remarking that probably the greater number of sudden deaths of children are those of suffocation, and this suffocation arises most frequently from spasm. Often after sudden death produced in this manner, the most minute, delicate examination of the anatomist and pathologist can absolutely find nothing to account for death. It would seem that the whole machinery of life was perfect, nothing wanting, nothing amiss. It would absolutely seem as if we had the power to set the pendulum of life vibrating again, that for all the injury then incurred, that clock of life might finish its three score years and ten. For instance a young babe, in perfect health, except perhaps that it is teething, that it cross only its nurse or more watchful mother noticed that it clenched its little hand or drew its thumb into the palm of the hand, suddenly is attacked with a spasm, becomes livid in the face, and in a moment the barking of the breath—it is no more—died from mere spasm without any cause to be seen anywhere, and hardly without a cry or struggle. The spasm held for a few seconds stopped the breath. Could the child have been carried through this one spasm, so far as we know it might have lived for years. This is the disease so fearful to mothers known as spasm [illegible] or the spasm of the laryngeal muscles may be caused by the irritable nerves in teething, from undigested food, or from the irritated bowels in cholera infantum. All these tend to produce that nervous irritation which betrays itself by a slight spasm of the wind pipe, producing the peculiar crowing inspiration so familiar to you, and also shown by the drawing the thumb into the palm of the hand. These symptoms may continue till the watchfulness even of the anxious mother is allayed, but so long as they continue there is no safety, and at any moment a sudden or some rapid change from heat to cold, rude awakening from sleep, or even a full meal, any startling shock may interfere with the regular movements of breathing, may give rise to a spasm which in a few moments may end in death. But I must not linger here. I will only mention that sudden death in childhood sometimes occurs from a rapid effusion of liquids into the lungs, causing death from suffocation. A child may be unwell for a few days, but not sufficient to excite alarm. Suddenly, perhaps while talking or eating, a spasm takes place and death ensues. I may say that minute things here portend danger and danger is warded off not by medicines, but by good nursing, warmth, proper food, correct position, rest, quiet, and without this, no medicinal agents are of a particle of value. I am confident I have seen death produced in this way, simply because the anxious mother must caress and talk to the loved one, and press it to her heart. But we have a class of disturbances beginning at the brain which tend to death. We often see persons passing away, unmindful, unconscious, intellect dormant, faculties stupified, the breathing is deep, slow and heavy, the eye may be open, but it sees no light, the ear hears no sound, the brain once so full of teeming thought and such high emprise, ambitious hopes, throws forth no sparkle of its wonted power. Death commencing at the brain may be unlooked for, without premonition, quick and overwhelming, or life may hang on for hours, or days, or even years. I once knew a person who first lost his sight, then his hearing, then the sense of smell, then of taste, and lastly, the ordinary sense of feeling, still month after month he lingered on. Food was conveyed to the back part of his mouth, where, by the palate muscles it was seized and conveyed to the stomach. But during all this length of time, though the wide world full of gladness and beauty lay all about him, though love attended him, and holy sympathy ministered to him, though pleasure and pain, happiness and misery, virtue and vice, moved on in their appointed way, though genial, balmy spring with the crowning of bright summer with its luscious ripened fruit, autumn made melodious with the songs of busy husbandmen passed before him, to all these mutations his mind gave no heed. He held no commune, he made no sign, he received no instruction, he still had the breath of life, his heart still beat, but to all intent and purpose he was dead. A post mortem examination revealed the fact that a tumor of considerable size existed, which pressed on all the nerves of sensation at their origin, and as it grew and increased in size, it obliterated and destroyed all that wonderful structure of nerve cells and nerve fibres, created for us by the infinite Father, by which and through which, the immortal part which shall never know death, the soul holds commune with the world. However, what was here seen, may take place in a few hours or days. The brain, owing to disease may become softened or hardened. Water or serum may be effused into the cavities of the brain; a blood vessel may be ruptured, or the brain may be compromised by a blow on the head, or blood may be received impure from the heart. Then we say he died comatose insensible. Let me recapitulate:

First. We have death by loss of blood, either direct as upon the battle-field, or indirect as the result of disease.

Second. Death from debility, or where the heart loses its power of contraction.

Third. We have death whenever air or oxygen has not free ingress and egress from the lungs, as is the case in death by drowning, or where the structure of the lungs become changed by disease so much that they no longer perform their proper functions. This is death from suffocation.

Fourth. We have death whenever from external injury or disease of the substance of the brain, the nervous system becomes incapacitated to govern and control the organism of animal life. However, in actual experience, we seldom see death approaching by only one of these methods. These are types: Thus, in the great class of continued fevers, we often, even generally see the person weak, the heart's pulsations have not their usual tone, therefore, there is a tendency to death from debility. The rich nutriments of the blood are expended, it is less opulent in albumen and fibrin, the red corpuscles have decreased in number. These various but necessary constituents are not renewed by the digestion of food, and in consequence, there is tendency to death from loss of blood. The fevered fluids irritate, inflame, cause congestion, and change the healthy structure of the lungs, therefore, there is a tendency to death from suffocation. The impure carbonized blood passes to the brain, does not afford healthy support and stimulus, and as a result, we have tendency to death from coma. Have you ever beheld the strong man laid prostrate? Yesterday he was able to bear the burden and heat of the day, now he requires aid to change his posture on his downy bed. You say he is very weak, you look again, and there is a purple glow on his cheek and a blue tint on his lip. You may be sure impure unoxygenized blood is circulating there, but see that intellect, which has placed him as Prince and King of the animal world, goes forth in vain imaginings and untempered dreams. That impure blood has poisoned his brain.

What I have endeavored to explain to you is not mere theory. These tendencies form the base and foundation stone to the superstructure of the scientific, intelligent practice of medicine, for our art is no black art, having its origin in the dark ages, allied to witchcraft and owing its success to some vile enchantments or exorcism of demon spirits, but a science, having its laws as fixed and certain as the laws of the natural Universe, and an art, certainly not arrived at perfection, but having its principles grounded and ascertained by long observation and experience. These wide, various, commingled and ever changing tendencies to dissolution, must be watched with unabated care, with philanthropic zeal, settled with just judgment, and proper and prompt remedies applied, if we would ward off the fell destroyer. But let me explain. A person takes chloroform. In what does the danger exist. It may arise from three distinct causes, either of which may be fatal. One commencing at the lungs, one at the brain, and one at the heart. I think I can make this plain to you. The first arises from the ignorance or carelessness of the person administering it, for if the handkerchief or sponge is so closely applied to the mouth and nasal passages as to cause the patient to breathe chloroform, and only chloroform unmixed with air your patient will as certainly die from suffocation as if he attempted to breathe only water. The patient requires air—chloroform will not keep him alive.

But persons subject to certain nervous diseases cannot take chloroform, because it destroys or prevents the proper function of the brain, and we have death with all the symptoms of compression or of apoplexy. And lastly, in very few cases doubtless it has the power and effect to entirely paralyze the heart, and in these cases if the physician is not on his guard imminent danger may be in his presence without his being aware. Arsenic does not even destroy life in the same manner always. It may corrode the stomach, destroying the mucous membrane and the delicate villi, entirely preventing the assimilation of food, and in a few days death follows from debility. But when taken in large quantities there is little or no corrosion, but the poison acts with great violence on the nervous system producing deep stupefaction, and death comes on with great rapidity. You have often heard of death immediately following the reception of important but unexpected news. You should know the importance of breaking such intelligence to the aged, the infirm, the weak. The stage of debility is on them, and sudden unlooked-for shock to the nervous system may cause the whole machinery of life to stand still. Cause for great joy or grief, unbroken by any warning, may be, and frequently is, as often fatal as a blow over the heart, or much as a stroke of lightning, or an over dose of prussic acid in causing the current of life to stand still at the fountain. Paralysis seizes the heart. Ordinarily death from debility is not painful. Calmly, quietly, if the mind be at ease, the afflicted pass to their rest. Reason, hope and faith smooth the sharp declivities to the valley of the river of death.

But even in other modes of death the way is not terrible or dark because of physical pain. Where death begins at the lungs, though the suffering is considerable at first, save the sensations of oppression and misery are soon relieved by a sweet delirium and the patient fancies himself traveling again over the scenes of his childhood, reviewing the associations of other and better days. He talks somewhat incoherently perhaps, of the various passages of his road through life. Laughing again over entertainments of mirth and pleasure. The statesman and orator reverts to the theatre of his struggles, and once again in gladiatorial conflict in legislative hall and senate chamber, the merchant follows with anxious solicitude his argosies freighted with the productions of every clime to its destined port. The warrior again surveys the plain as field of his fame. Like Napoleon, the grand almost of intellect and ambition, who, on the dark and stormy night when his eagle soul broke the chains of earth and took its everlasting flight, he was Emperor again, he held the sceptre in his hand, he felt the crown on his burning brow. His child, the Grande Armee greeted him Vive le Empereur. The marshals of France, the creatures of his making, the supports of his throne, were around him. He saw his myriad hosts file imperially away in grand review. He heard the shock of battle, the thunder of booming cannon sounded in his ears, and while calling in the old way, in tones worthy of Marengo or Austerlitz, tete de armee, he passed forever away.

Even in these instances [illegible] the only sufferers [illegible] the pangs of expiring [illegible]

I will ask your attention to a mode of death not common [illegible] I allude to spontaneous combustion. Of its cause and nature, I confess we know very little. Those addicted to the use of alcoholic stimulants are the subjects of this strange mode of death. An intoxicated person retires for the night and in the morning the body [illegible] is consumed with fire. Their clothing is generally consumed but the fire does not extend to surrounding objects. The flame is of a pale, blue color, of a flickering character. The subjects of this singular visitation and judgment for violations of law are generally old, weak and debilitated. I regret to say that women are more liable to it than men. Of twenty nine cases that I have recorded, twenty eight were women. The combustion penetrates the body very quickly [illegible] The flame is not easily put out by water. The most ingenious and probably the correct theory of this strange phenomenon is, that somehow the agency of the alcohol, by some chemical change, lets free the phosphorus in the body which takes fire and burns with great rapidity. I will say a few words concerning the methods of death resorted to by government for the punishment of crime and protection of society. Our Government resorts to hanging: death not happening in the majority of cases from fracture of the neck but from suffocation. Very seldom does a sudden rupture or fracturing the neck—they consequently die from suffocation.

Our fathers were wont to burn at the stake. Though terrible to contemplate, this is not so painful as might be supposed. The smoke and noxious gases take the place of the air, producing suffocation, and the whole [illegible] carries to the brain and soon produces deep, profound stupefaction.

The ancients gave their state prisoners poison. Socrates drank hemlock, which produces at first a fullness in the head, dizziness, followed by delirium and finally stupor. On the whole there can be no reason to doubt that Socrates had rather a pleasant mode of death.

The most painful death would be that which would expose a person to intense pain for a long time, leaving him to breathe; the pain, however, should not be of that overwhelming character which, by its very energy, would engulf and destroy the sensibilities of the brain. Such a mode of punishment was in vogue among the Romans. I allude to death by crucifixion. The person extended on the tree, nails driven through the most sensitive portions of the body, preventing all those nerves so freely distributed to the extremities for the purposes of ordinary sensation, the lungs are left free; air has free ingress and egress from the pulmonary organs, the brain retains its full capacity of responding to the excruciating sensations of pain. In this manner we are informed the victim often continued to agonize for three days, seldom less than two. Of all the inventions of human malignity to aggravate to the widest range the sum of misery to the victim of either justice or passionate prejudice this may justly take the palm. Well might the poor, trembling mortal exclaim in the agony of despair—"My God! my God! why hast thou forsaken me?" But as this exclamation of our Savior was not made in allusion to his bodily pains, as it must be admitted, from the records of the Evangelists, that the crucifixion was only an incident in the death of our Savior. He was only on the cross six hours. He was only thirty three years of age, in the prime of his manly nature, and certainly had there been no other cause, humanly speaking, he would have lived longer than this. It was the terrible unknown agony of the Garden, the never to be measured passion there, which caused such action of the heart that he sweat great drops of blood, which so enfeebled him that he was unable to carry unaided his cross, and the crucifixion, full of torture though it was, was only an element, and I judge not the important one in that death which made propitiation for all.

I had intended to say something of old age, something of that second childhood, something of that loss of muscular power, of loss of voice, of that big, manly voice, turning again towards childish treble, pipes and whistles in its sound, of diminution of intellect, loss of memory, of the very wreck of man's mental nature, of all that bankruptcy of mind and body which led the poet to exclaim—

"In life's last scene what prodigies surprise,
From Marlborough's eyes the tears of dotage flow,
And Swift expires a driveller and a show."

But I must halt to examine now what all aims to know, that life protracted is protracted wo.

I may remark in conclusion that fearful as death is, as much as it is our duty to ward it off, that the pains of earthly dissolution are not of such a nature as to cause us to tremble on the brink of the river. If we have well done, if at ease in our [illegible], we may look tranquilly if not joyfully on the boiling flood, assured we soon shall be safely over in that other and better land where the sun ever shines, where rainbows never fade, where spring time ever abounds and health and beauty and youth are ever renewed by the waters of the river of life.

"May we all so live that when the summons comes to join the innumerable caravan that moves to that mysterious realm where each shall take his appointed chamber in the silent halls of death, we may exclaim with the sweet singer of Israel—

"The Lord is my shepherd; and though I walk through the Valley of the Shadow of Death I will fear no evil, for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me; surely goodness and mercy have followed me all the days of my life; and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever."

MEDICAL WONDER.

The stooping, trembling victim of depression and debility becomes a new man. He stands erect, he moves with a firm step, his mind, which was previously sunk in gloom, or an almost idiotic apathy, becomes bright and active, and he goes forth regenerated, conscious of new vigor. The medicine reaches the CONSTITUTION itself, and restores it to its normal condition.
